TRIP PURPOSE

Mixed tour report created 2 years after from memory except for the bird observations. A compilation of birding sessions, alone and with three different parties, two of them clients.

The major client trip, with Olaf Soltau et al, had the purpose of finding the coast-near endemics in a little week. The other sessions were primarily of a scouting nature.

The report is kept simple and mainly put together to show which species are to be expected on a trip to this wonderful and exotic part of the world.

TRIP RESULT

Species total: 270. Total endemic species: 4. Total regional species: 23. Total heard-only species: 5 (Pheasant Cuckoo, Northern Potoo, Middle American Screech-Owl, Collared Forest-Falcon, Slate-headed Tody-Flycatcher).

270 species is a good amount to see on a Yucatan tour, and very acceptable with only 5 species as heard-only. During the leg with clients Soltau et al, we were rather successful getting almost all the target species except for the Russt-naped Wood-Rail which would not come out, even though I had it on my scouting trips the days before.

On Isla Holbox it was good to get a few Lesser Black-backed gulls, new for me in Mexico, and funny to find a Red-breasted Merganser there too. A Gray Kingbird was more expected. Isla Blanca was interesting with Zenaida Dove, Piping Plovers and the white form of Great Blue Heron.

A lifer and rare Smooth-billed Ani allowed for good photos in Cancún, when I was alone, at the very reliable Ruddy Crake locality.

The reserve Toh, not so far from Cancún proved to be a good jungle locality, almost like the botanical garden close to Puerto Morelos, but still more virgin and fascinating the place, lying more inland away from the buzzing highway.

The Río Lagartos area on the northern coast in Yucatán state is always a great place to visit. Both because of the localized endemics exclusively found here, which we did, but also the many other birds present in the mixed landscapes between estuary and savanna.

Cozumel is also always interesting and we got the most important species and subspecies on the island, including seen Yucatan Nightjar.

See page about the Cozumel subspecies here

The Vigía Chico road out of Felipe Carrillo Puerto is still good and gave many of the common forest species, and if one looks for it deep enough inside, the Ocellated Turkey is still possible to get here as well.

Otherwise Calakmul is where to go to get the turkey and the Great Curassow. And Calakmul is also the most natural and undisturbed jungle in all of Mexico with the biggest potential of wildlife in general and birds in particular. The mix of ruins and forest is very fascinating and better yet, because the place is still too far from the massive flow of tourists you find along the coast. A true winner!

Ruins Muyil north of Felipe Carrillo Puerto is a small locality with a fine boardwalk trail through wet forest floor leading to the edge of a lake. Many of the good forest species can be found here, and there are normally not many visitors coming here allowing you to enjoy the birds.

Ruins Cobá plus lake and surroundings is also an excellent place to visit for birds, but being much more popular you are also guaranteed to meet hoards of tourist unless you are here early. The lake normally has Spotted Rail.

Pre-client tour investigation. Planned to drive to the research station quickly in the morning, 30 km, and return scouting. But met a warden in the station who told me that further ahead there would be O. Turkeys with guarantee. Didn't know it was possible to drive into the Sian Ka'an area beyond the station, but yes. So, wanted to explore and decided to drop the normal small-stuff birding. But it would be a long drive to get there, another 30 km or so, so was a tough decision. Finally got the turkeys but the dirt road was very potholed and it took one and a half hour from the station to where the Turkeys were. Being much easier in Calakmul, I'll not use this spot as an option for these. | 5/8
